

Teenage Pregnancy Argumentative Essay

When a female under the age of 20 gets pregnant it's known as Teenage pregnancy. In Modern-day societies, teenage isn't considered an age to be a mother as it can lead to severe health related complications, low social status and less economic prosperity. Teenage pregnancy must be PREVENTED but in case a teenager becomes a mother, it shouldn't be the end of life but the beginning of a new one.(Thesis statement)

82% of the Teenage pregnancies are unintended. The uncertain and unwanted nature of these types of pregnancies leads to a lot of problems. Pregnant women have to take special care of themselves. Along with proper nutritional food and a balanced diet, being stress free is also very important. Stress during pregnancy can have very adverse effects on the child; and adolescent mothers have to face a lot of stress from family, friends and society. Complications during pregnancy and childbirth are the leading cause of death for 15–19-year-old girls globally.

It is also observed that teenage mothers don't get support from their male partners and 8 out of 10 teen dads never marry the mother of their child. The teen mom alone has to bear the physical, mental and emotional burden of giving birth to a young one and taking care of it for the first few years. This leads to teenage mothers dropping out of schools. In fact, more than 50% of teen mothers never graduate from high school. Without higher education and proper degrees, getting a high paying job becomes very hard and most of the teen mothers struggle to live a quality life.

Many teens find the solution of the complications of being a Teenage mother in abortions but abortion can't be the solution. According to WHO out of 5.6 million Teenage abortions, 3.9 million are unsafe and can lead to serious health problems for the Teenage girls. Furthermore, the mental and emotional trauma of killing a part of her own self can be overwhelming for some teen moms and many even describe their lives after abortion to be empty and rather depressed.

In developing regions like Eastern Asia and Northern Africa, teenage pregnancy is a problem associated with inadequate healthcare facilities and poverty but the teen moms and their children get full family support and acceptance in these areas. For developed regions like the U.S.A, the U.K or Europe; teenage pregnancy remains more of a social issue. If adequate healthcare services are provided to teen moms in developing countries and proper social support and acceptance is given to teen moms in developed countries then the problem of teenage pregnancy could be solved to a large extent.

Conclusion -

It's past time when we stop stereotyping teen mothers and teenage pregnancy. There's no doubt that prevention from Teenage pregnancy should remain our first priority as it can lead to socio-economic and health related problems. But when a Teenager gets pregnant, we as family members, as friends, as neighbours and as a member of society as a whole; should try to provide all the love, care and support that a teen mom needs in her crucial times. These acts of ours could save millions of lives and can make their future brighter.
